PROGRAMME

The programme may be subject to modifications

The truth belongs to no one. Through history, it always had diverse faces. Since antiquity many have struggled to define it... But over time, the truth has imposed itself as the horizon of any reasoned debate... Indeed, there is no possibility of progress in sciences without concern for accuracy and truth, no living democracy if its fundamentals are built on lies, no relationship which is excepted to last without such a requirement, no proclamation of faith which is possible without being reconciled with reason, no press publication which is credible without an aspiration for objectivity.

« Facts, only facts » are at the core of the journalistic ethic. Today, in most places, alternative truths are trying to be established in politics, economy or on a spiritual level. They are fed by relativism which is expanding all around, along with the overrating plurality of interpretation. Post-truth is constantly extending its authority and its ascendancy which makes debates increasingly complicated. Therefore, it is a critical challenge for all citizens including us, Christians, to be firmly at the service of truth.

However, it is not about a fashionable, rigid, dogmatic and apathetic truth. It is really about a truth which is all at once vibrant, debated, but always a source of meaning in order to clarify the future. It is nothing less than a long-lasting lifestyle choice.

This desire to serve the truth – under all its aspects, by philosophers, theologians, political leaders and journalists – will be the main focus of the 22nd International St. Francis de Sales Days this January in Lourdes.

Why should we miss out on such debates, right ?

François Ernenwein,

Program Coordinator of the St. Francis de Sales Days.

Jean-Marie Montel,

Truth's multiple facets

[ Philosophical dimension ]

Roundtable discussion moderated by Christophe Henning (Pèlerin)

There is no unanimous agreement neither about the nature of the concept, nor the way to think it through. There is no consensus as to the classic definition of truth, and even the ones who could agree on it, cannot agree upon its specification or its implications.

Overall, the question « what does the truth mean ? » is always open. Philosophical disagreements on the way in which we consider the truth shall not prevent us from identifying most truths.

With the participation of :

- Marco Tarquinio, Director of l'Avvenire, daily newspaper of the Italian Bishops' Conference. Italian journalist and expert in national and international politics. ## The uses of truth

[ Political and economic dimension ]

Roundtable discussion moderated by Antoine-Marie Izoard (Famille chrétienne)

Politics and economy have their own language, far removed from common everyday life. Their focuses are as much on perceptions, appearances and feelings than on facts, numbers and rational arguments. How do we go from the subjective register of perception to the objective register of facts and at what cost ?

With the participation of :

- Helen Osman, American expert in communication. She was elected President of Signis (World Catholic Association of Communicators) the 22th of June 2017. Helen Osman is recognized worldwide for her work as a writer and journalist. She has held various leadership positions in the Catholic communication field in the US. She was Communications Director for the Diocese of Austin (Texas) for over twenty years, after which she was Chief Communications Officer of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops for eight years.

- Jérôme Fourquet, political scientist, director of the « Opinion and business strategies » department at the polling organization Ifop. He published with the Editions de l'Aube : Accueil ou submersion, regards européens sur la crise des migrants.

- Amélie de Montchalin, economist with a degree in history and applied economy and a master in public administration. She is deputy of La République en Marche in the sixth electoral district of Essone.

- Jérôme Chapuis, co-editor in chief of the Political news desk of the Grand Jury RTL – Le Figaro – LCI from 2012 to 2015. Editor in chief at RTL and anchor from 6am to 7am.

Exchange between the speakers and with the public.

Truth and objectivity

[ Journalistic dimension ]

Roundtable moderated by Martin Féron (RCF)

Information ethics refers to a value which is nonexclusive but prevailing : that is the truth. This value clearly guides the code of journalistic ethics : « seeking for the truth », « respecting the truth »... It conditions journalistic objectivity which is a recurrent topic among professional and the public.

With the participation of :

- Rev. Dr Joseph Borg, Director of RTK, Catholic radio of Malta. Holding a Master Degree in Theology from the University of Malta, he has also completed graduate studies in communications at Concordia University in Montreal (Canada). He is one of the promoters of the study of media education in Church schools. Head of the Press Office of the Archdiocese, he is also the founder of RTK radio and the newspaper Il-Gens. He is also known for taking action in the fight against corruption among the elite, especially after the murder of the whistleblower, Daphne Caruana Galizia, who had denounced the abuses of the Prime Minister, his family and some member of his staff.

- Jean-Claude Guillebaud, essayist, journalist and reporter. Promoted columnist for the Nouvel Observateur in 2010, he also writes a column about society and political French life in the weekly magazine La Vie. He has a degree in law and is a graduate in criminal sciences. He published many books such as : La vie vivante (Les Arènes, 2011) ; Le goût de l'avenir (Seuil, 2011) ; Une autre vie est possible (L'Iconoclaste, 2012) ; La foi qui reste (L'Iconoclaste, 2017).

- Mariette Darrigrand, specialist in semiology, director of the firm specialised in analyses of the media rhetoric : Des Faits et Signes. Blogger and commentator (France Culture, Le secret des sources), she regularly intervenes in the media. She also gives classes at Paris 13 on the topic of books semiology. She published : Comment les médias nous parlent (mal) ?

- Cyril Lemieux, specialist in sociology, Director of study at the School of High study in Social Sciences (École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales, EHESS).
